GLOBAL TECHNOLOGY LEADERS SUMMIT

Adam Selipsky

Vice President, Product Management and Developer Relations
Amazon Web Services

Adam Selipsky joined Amazon Web Services in May 2005 as Vice President for Product Management and Developer Relations. He oversees developer support, product strategy, demand generation, evangelism, and marketing communications related to the Amazon Web Services business. Launched in July 2002, Amazon Web Services exposes technology and product data from Amazon and its affiliates, enabling companies to build websites, store data, and manage business processes “in the cloud.”

Before joining Amazon Web Services, Selipsky served as a Vice President in several areas for RealNetworks, including Video Services, Consumer Marketing, and RealPlayer. He also held a number of systems marketing positions relating to enterprise markets. Prior to that, Selipsky was a partner at Mercer Management Consulting, specializing in business strategy for telecommunications and technology companies.

Selipsky earned his bachelor’s degree in government from Harvard College and his master’s in business administration from Harvard Business School.
